SOUTH AUSTRALIA: Politicians vote to create fatherless children

by Josh Alstin, News Weekly, May 26, 2012

Opponents of same-sex marriage were compared to racists during an acrimonious debate in South Australia's upper house of parliament, the Legislative Council, earlier this month.

Members of the Legislative Council were debating a private member's bill, the Assisted Reproductive Treatment (Equality of Access) Amendment Bill 2012, which is designed to allow access to IVF for lesbian couples and single women.

Independent MLC, Ann Bressington, declared that "it is well time that we got past the view that somehow same-sex couples are second-class citizens". She claimed that opposition to lesbian couples being granted access to IVF was akin to the "fear-mongering around interracial marriages [and] inter-religious marriages".

The controversial bill was first proposed in September last year by Ian Hunter MLC, a long-time homosexual activist before he entered parliament in 2006. He is currently Minister for Communities and Social Inclusion in the Weatherill Labor government. Mr Hunter's bill was passed by 12 votes to nine in the Legislative Council on May 2 on a conscience vote, and has now gone to the House of Assembly, the lower house, for a further vote.

The proposed legislation is ostensibly designed to remove the current clause restricting IVF access to women with fertility problems and to extend IVF access to the "socially infertile", i.e., lesbian couples — thereby, in the name of same-sex "equality", deliberately depriving such children of a relationship with their biological father.

The bill does not specifically refer to lesbians or single women but talks about "equality of access" for a "particular woman" who is "unlikely to become pregnant other than by assisted reproductive treatment". A previous bill, moved by Ian Hunter in 2011, was more explicit and advertised its intentions in its title, Assisted Reproductive Treatment – Assistance for Lesbians and Single Women Amendment.

However, during debate in the Legislative Council, the bill's supporters soon made it clear that their ultimate agenda was more than just extending access to IVF; it was primarily concerned with promoting the cause of same-sex marriage.

Labor MLC Gerry Kandelaars declared that it was "time for our society to truly accept that homosexuality is a reality and that homosexual couples should be able to have their relationship and their love recognised under our secular law". However, neither the welfare of the children potentially created through this legislation, nor the fact that lesbian couples cannot act as both mother and father to a child, was addressed by the bill's proponents.

The only real concern expressed by the bill's advocates was, as Kandelaars stated, to alleviate distress for lesbians who are supposedly "forced" to get pregnant using "backyard methods with inherent health risks".

Dignity for Disability MLC, Kelly Vincent, explained that these "backyard methods" included the "undignified" situation of "lesbian couples [who] must revert to the turkey baster method to get pregnant". The bill must now be approved by the House of Assembly before it can become law.

In December 2011, Labor Premier Jay Weatherill said he would support the bill. However, he is not supported by everyone in his government. According to the Adelaide Advertiser, "Attorney-General John Rau and Health Minister John Hill have previously declared they would not legislate to allow access to reproductive treatment for same-sex couples or to allow adoption" - Advertiser, May 2, 2012.

The National Civic Council and the Australian Family Association are pledged to work for the defeat of the bill. Although almost 60 per cent of SA's MLCs – 12 out of 21 voting members – voted in favour of the bill, a 2009 Galaxy Poll showed that 86 per cent of Australians believe that children should ideally be raised by their biological mother and father.

The support in South Australia's upper house for a bill that would create fatherless children demonstrates the influence that homosexual activists wield in the corridors of power and also how out of touch politicians are with the majority of their voters.

Mr Kandelaars provided an example of this disconnect when he denounced opposition to the bill as "bigotry personified".

How can these parliamentarians purport to represent the will of the people when they not only oppose the majority of Australians but also dismiss their views as "bigotry", "discrimination" and comparable to racist fear-mongering?

We deserve better from our elected representatives — and so do our children.

Dismissed Freemason pleads case

By: Court Reporter Sean Fewster The Advertiser January 18, 2012 12:00AM

THE state's Freemasons have been rocked by innuendo, abuse and a member's unfair expulsion, court documents claim.

Six years of unrest within the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of SA and NT are the subject of an Adelaide Magistrates Court lawsuit.

James Spriggs has asked the court to force the reinstatement of his Freemasons membership.

He claims the elite group denied him "natural justice" by expelling him when he complained about the way it ran an aged care facility.

The society, however, has told the court Mr Spriggs' "persistent and unwarranted interference" amounted to "conduct unbecoming a Freemason".

Dating back to 17th century stonemasons, the male-only organisation promotes charitable community work, morality and friendship.

Its detractors include the Catholic Church and Nazi Germany, and it often features in conspiracy theories and books such as Dan Brown's The Lost Symbol.

Freemason Grand Lodges, located in capital cities, oversee the actions of members in their area or "jurisdiction".

The court action centres on Mr Spriggs' opposition to the running of the Memorial Masonic Village in Darwin.

Court papers assert that, since 2006, he has written letters accusing the village's board - consisting of Freemasons - of mismanagement.

At the time, he held the elected position of "Worshipful Master" of the Darwin Lodge, which falls under the jurisdiction of Adelaide's Grand Lodge.

Mr Spriggs' letters claimed "unchecked innuendo" about the village potentially being sold had done "psychological abuse" to its tenants.

In his statement of claim, Mr Spriggs says his expulsion was "oppressive and unreasonable". "They did not advise me of any details of the matters they considered I had done wrong," he says.

Mr Spriggs has asked the court to reinstate his membership and award him costs.

In their defence documents, the Freemasons say Mr Spriggs' "persistent" claims of mismanagement were not supported by any evidence. "(He was told) the consequences of continued conflict with the elected board would be expulsion," the papers say.

The case returns next month.

Norwegian mass killer Anders Breivik's evil Aussie email

By: Caroline Marcus, The Sunday Telegraph, August 07, 2011 12:00AM

THE Knights Templar of Australia believe Norwegian mass killer Anders Breivik tried to seek membership with them weeks before his bloodbath.

The group, inspired by a medieval order of "pure" Christian knights founded in the Holy Land, received an email about a month ago from Norway seeking affiliation, "adjutant" Paul Grice said.

"We have had a request for affiliation and mutual understanding, an alliance if you will, from a chap alleged to be a Knights Templar in Norway," Mr Grice said.

Anders Behring Breivik after leaving the courthouse following a hearing in Oslo where he pleaded not guilty to one of the deadliest modern mass killings in peacetime. Source: AP

Sir Paul Grice. Adjutant Commander of Oceania. Source: Supplied

"What we think is that it was (from) the organisation that enabled (Breivik)."

The Norwegian right-wing extremist killed 76 people in the world's worst mass shooting on July 22.

Norwegian authorities say he acted alone, but Mr Grice said Knights Templar in Australia subscribe to a conspiracy involving several gunmen and suspect Breivik may not be a real person but a construct of a pro-Israel organisation.

He said they also believe Tasmania's 1996 Port Arthur massacre of 35 people was not the work of convicted gunman Martin Bryant but a bigger organisation that used him as a scapegoat.

Mr Grice said his order rejected the claim that Breivik was a Knights Templar, despite Breivik's references to acting on behalf of the movement in his writings and a photograph he posted on the internet of himself dressed in full regalia.

After Mr Grice forwarded the email to his group's "parent" order in the UK, they established it was not from a genuine Knights Templar and deleted it from the system.

Mr Grice has been unable to provide the Sunday Telegraph with a copy of the email.

"It was dismissed like most fruitcakes are dismissed," he said. "Yes, we were contacted but it's no big deal.

"We get contacted by nutters all the time."

Since the shooting and Breivik's alleged association with Knights Templar were reported, Mr Grice said his order went from receiving 100 inquiries a week to 1000 a day from all over the world.

"Every time one of these fruitcakes pretends to be a Templar, we get hundreds of nutcases," he said.

NSW and ACT Freemasons grand secretary Kevin McGlinn rejected the claim that Breivik was a Freemason.

"We note he listed in his interests being a Freemason but clearly he did not practise Freemasonry, which is a non-denominational organisation dedicated to serving the community," Mr McGlinn said.

Mystery death of a Knight Templar

By: Kathleen Donaghey, The Sunday Mail-Qld, February 05, 2012 12:00AM

LONELY END: Knight Templar Rick Gill was devastated to hear fellow member Robert Kent, pictured, lay dead and undiscovered in a caravan park for almost two weeks. Source: Supplied

ROBERT Antony Kent died alone, on the floor of his caravan, and his body lay undiscovered for almost two weeks.

He is not nameless, nor faceless. But no family can be found to claim the committed Freemason and "nice bloke". So his final goodbye may be a government-organised "pauper's funeral".

The 72-year-old's badly decomposed remains have been at the state mortuary for four weeks as the fruitless international search for relatives continues.

The gruesome discovery in January has upset his friends and shocked neighbours who lived within metres of him at sleepy Bribie Island's Bongaree Caravan Park. It has served as a cautionary tale for many of them.

Census data shows about 116,000 Queensland seniors (aged 65 and over) live alone. And, as the population ages, there are warnings more cases of undiscovered deaths will emerge.

Mr Kent, seemingly well educated, was an extremely private person. Friends and neighbours knew almost nothing of his personal life or past.

He was described variously as a "recluse" or "secretive" but was well-liked and respected and spoke with a "proper" Australian accent.

He lived alone in the van and annexe he owned and, like his retired neighbours, was understood to be upset by the Moreton Bay Regional Council's planned mass evictions.

The council plans to convert the permanent sites into camping, leaving more than 200 residents unable to sell and facing an uncertain future.

He appeared to have no surviving family.

But he was a model neighbour, a "hell of a nice bloke" who was friendly and considerate.

Mr Kent was last seen on December 22.

Friend Rick Gill, 73, believes he may be the closest thing Mr Kent had to family. It was Mr Gill and Mr Kent's neighbour, Zorro Williams, who alerted the park manager who made the discovery of his remains.

Mr Williams said he had no idea his neighbour had died, even when his wife Mercy complained of a "bad smell" coming from that end of their relocatable home.

On January 3, Mr Williams noticed a swarm of blowflies buzzing around his neighbour's floor.

By then, a worried Mr Gill - concerned his friend had not replied to emails - had phoned the park manager.

After they broke a number of locks, they found Mr Kent's body between the sink and kitchen table.

A spokesman for the Deputy State Coroner said it appeared Mr Kent died of natural causes.

It is understood unclaimed bodies are eventually cremated or buried by government contractors - a so-called "pauper's funeral".

Mr Kent's Freemason friends are determined to see their brother buried with dignity. Mr Kent was a member of the ritualistic Scottish Knights Templar and the Masonic Order of the Secret Monitor.

He travelled the state in his van to attend Masonic meetings kitted in his robes and regalia. From Townsville to Toowoomba, he was known and respected by Freemasons who say they want a proper send-off.

"Why can't they use his money to give him a decent funeral then all the Freemasons can come from everywhere?" Mr Gill said.

Masons claim knight and will bury him

By: Harry Brumpton, The Courier-Mail, February 07, 2012 12:00AM

LONELY END: Knight Templar Robert Kent lay dead and undiscovered in a caravan park for almost two weeks. Now Queensland's Masonic order have said it will take care of his burial if no family can be traced.

THE Freemason Brotherhood has taken charge of the burial of Bribie Island recluse and "Knight Templar" Robert Anthony Kent, whose body was found almost two weeks after his death.

After the 72-year-old's badly decomposed remains were discovered in his Bongaree Caravan Park home in January, his neighbours and others he knew expressed fears the reserved but gentle man would be farewelled with an anonymous government funeral.

The Knights Templar is a special division of the Masons and Mr Kent's involvement was thought to be "significant".

Yesterday, following a story in The Sunday Mail about Mr Kent's lonely death, Queensland's Masonic order responded by trying to trace family members in Mr Kent's native New Zealand.

Queensland Freemasons deputy grand secretary Graham Schulz said the organisation would give him a Masonic send-off if no family could be found, or unless any family who were traced objected.

"If it comes down to it, we will pay," Mr Schulz said.

"We've discovered it's a public holiday in New Zealand, which is making things a bit tricky."

He said while the extent of Mr Kent's involvement with the Masons was not known because he had moved between lodges, it but was thought to have been "significant".

The Masonic funeral ritual includes draping the member's apron across the coffin and placing on it a sprig of Acacia wattle which is a Masonic symbol.

Unclaimed Freemason honoured

By: Kathleen Donaghey, The Courier-Mail, February 22, 2012 12:00AM

BOB Kent died alone and undiscovered for two weeks but in the end the Freemason received a dignified funeral.

Friends and Freemasons came from everywhere yesterday to farewell the 72-year-old Bribie Island man who had died with no family to speak of.

Tears fell as the packed house recalled the generosity of the private gentleman who was devoted to the Freemasons and had loyal friends in orders right across the state.

Mr Kent died in his caravan at the Bongaree Caravan Park before Christmas and had been lying unclaimed in the state morgue ever since.

The moving service was held at the Caboolture and Districts Lawn Cemetery at Deception Bay and was conducted by the Reverend Grahame Baldock, also a Freemason.

Ancient group casts web wide for young blood

By: Tom Bowden, The Advertiser, May 18, 2012 11:00PM

GOOGLE "Freemasonry" and you're likely to find a host of websites about conspiracies, secrecy and the illuminati.

But the truth, according to the Freemasons, is that the group is about symbols, rituals, allegories and metaphors that help men live a better life.

South Australia and Northern Territory Grand Lodge Grand Master Robert Parsons and Deputy Grand Master Stephen Michalak say that far from being a secret society, the Freemasons simply has an image problem. They are now focusing on ways to attract younger members keen to give back to their community.

"In the past, going back 10 or 15 years, I believe, in our attempts to attract men to Freemasonry, we've been too old-fashioned," said Mr Parsons, who has been a Freemason since 1968. "We have not kept up with the times inasmuch as the way to go about it," he said. "Now we are experiencing a good influx of men, both young and older, who are joining and it's because we have changed our ways with technology. "It's about time that we did and up until about three years ago we were struggling - we're still struggling as far as membership goes - but it has increased quite considerably over the past couple of years."

Building foreman Jarrod Acres, 25, who joined two months ago, said he wanted to give back to the community.

"One comment that really resounded with me was that it makes good men great," he said. "It's the reason I joined a football club or the reason anybody joins any group is just because they want to be a part of something bigger than themselves."

Disability employment service worker Peter Berekally, 29, said Freemasonry was not a religion but a secular and inclusive group of men. "You've got this mentality where you want to help and I think that's why many of us are attracted to masonry because it gives us the opportunity to channel that," he said.

Freemasons have existed in South Australia since 1836. Prominent members have included former governor Sir Eric Neal, chief justices such as the first Grand Master, Sir Samuel Way, and business leaders Owen Redman and Allan Scott.

At its peak, there were more than 27,000 registered South Australian Freemasons.

So exactly what are Freemasons and what do they do?

"We're normal people," Mr Parsons said. "It's just being with people that you know are like-minded - they have the same principles, the same family values and you know when you meet a Freemason that he's an honest and upright person."

While Mr Parsons said it was not a secret organisation, there were some things they kept to themselves.

"We are an organisation that has a few secrets, and that sort of expression has been used a great deal, and we keep that within our organisation," Mr Parsons said. "Those secrets are mainly methods of recognition and some signs that we use and, yes, there is that mystique." Mr Parsons said Freemasonry's mystique was a blessing and a curse.

"This doesn't do us any harm as long as we make it clear we're not behind closed doors doing stupid things," he said.

"Our organisation is about 300 years old and there have been rumours about Freemasons doing the wrong thing.

"But a lot of the religions of old regarded us as a religion - and therefore competition for them.

"There's no truth in any of the things that you hear from time to time, as far as I'm aware - going back 200 years it might have been something, but I don't know."

The "craft" of Freemasonry involves ceremonial rituals - allegorical teachings of how to be a better father, husband and member of society.

Masons study three ritualistic degrees - the entered apprentice, the fellow craft and the master mason degrees.

Each degree relates to a step of character development, says Mr Michalak, who has risen to the role of Deputy Grand Master in just 12 years.

"The first ritual talks a lot about the basics of life ... and in the second degree we talk more about the intellect - the things that we as adults get involved in," he said.

"The third degree is really about preparations for our last moments of life ... and it reminds us to live our lives as best as we can as a preparation for that moment."

Mr Michalak said the principles of Freemasonry were simple. "We use the symbolic tools of the stonemasons of old and these are metaphors of how we should live," he said.

The set square reminds masons of the importance of squaring actions away, the chisel to smooth off a person's rough edges and the compass represents a person's "circle of attainment".

As they graduate from the degrees they earn an apron, which represents their status and reflects the teachings. While the craft has long attracted businessmen and people of social influence, Mr Parsons says any man can apply to become a mason - they simply need to be over 18, believe in God or a "supreme being" and be of good character; and no man with a girlfriend or wife can join without their blessing. To minimise any potential for conflict, members are forbidden from discussing religion and politics.

Far from just teachings and rituals, the Freemasons is a recognised charity and has raised $4.5 million since 1989 for medical research, men's health, community projects and educational scholarships.

Last year the SA Freemasons organised a national Movember members challenge, raising $12,000 in SA and $67,000 in total.

Oh, and I almost forgot the secret handshake ...

"The handshake certainly does exist and is used when we meet a brother, and it is not a funny thing like you see on The Simpsons - it's nothing like that," he laughs.

MONEY: The 12th and Final Religion

QUEBEC "AUSTERITY" LIFTS MONEY VEIL, Saturday, June 02, 2012

Precursor Follow up

Last month our circle noticed that social-political unrest in Montreal was spreading throughout the Province.

This month there is support rising across Canada and already present in Europe. The cause of this unrest by student-unemployed, parents-unemployed and workers on strike to protect pensions and wages can be described in one word: "AUSTERITY".

We know that austerity is good for those who already have pay, positions and pension eligibility. We also know that Austerity is disaster for those who don't have pay, position or pension prospects. The veil has lifted, but so far the media is silent. The prospect that the end of the era of central bank international stock exchange finance has morphed into the age of the impossible is not reported.

Loco Lola, says it is also prophetic that it should happen simultaneously in Greece, cradle of Eastern Orthodoxy and in Quebec with deep roots in Western Catholicism. Emma of Kazabazua, just North of Ottawa, gets like this when she drifts into her past life as Queen Juana of Castile the first woman Jesuit at the 1555 Vatican. They called her Loco Lola.

Understanding Impossible

Our Prof C More Books says it is a collective denial on the part of the ruling Bourgeoisie, "Booghie" for short. The Booghie cohort has a vision of life as a pattern of events measured in money terms of pay, position and finally pensions. The non-Booghie cohort, now representing at least 40% of work capable population, up from about 12% during the Reagan-Mulroney period, no longer has living pay, steady position or pension possibilities on the life radar.

The arrival of this circumstance should not be a surprise, offers the Prof. "We have known since "Soddy" in 1913 that the free-trade, national debt, central bank system paid by income tax was only good for about a century." Then it would become "impossible," sighs the Prof. Unfortunately we do not have a working model to describe "impossible," he chuckles sort of sadistically. He, self described as all-knowing on finance, politics, economies, religions and ETs, barely conceals his resentment at being unwelcome in the high circles of Academia.

Tension Rising

Quite typically, the Booghie cohort in Parliament in Quebec City, quite comfortable in pay, position and pension does not see the situation. The student, crying out in deep but misguided faith in the "system" expected a favorable "democratic" reaction to their demand for no tuition hike. The Booghies insulted by the inference that they did not understand economic conditions and needs responded with an insult in kind.

A law number 78 was passed that effectively criminalized questioning of the learned of Parliament. The upshot is that the unrest is no longer a matter of tuition, but has become a matter of human justice for the have nots in the face of Booghie powerful in their security of pay, position and pension. The tension between the have nots of pay, position and pension and those who have is perfectly described in the disciplined ranks of uniformed police. Periodically these disciplined ranks made secure in the "system" by pay, position and pension select from the mass of have not demonstrators a sample for arrest.

Loco Lola says the circumstances that create the era of "impossible" is now known. She says read THE AMERICAN CALIPHATE of BIZWOG: The Final World Order. The Prof says to read book; MONEY: The 12th and FINAL RELIGION. [ Note: Both excellent books. I'm stilling working on both. - sc ]

According to modern MBA programs as they train for superior management positions, people ie workers, are a cost, an expense to be minimized. Fewer workers can translate into higher stock price if outsourcing and downsizing done with cunning and verve.

Bonuses are awarded

Loco speaks again from deep trance. "It is prophesied that the corporation, a sort of Golem, has been mistakenly called a person. The theory of pensions provided by stock exchange (swindle) finance will soon be seen as a concept too absurd to be considered serious thought." She is most outrageous when she says that work can no longer provide life supporting incomes. YIKES!

Screen memory of me riding Cpl Duty First's 1949 tank shift, suicide clutch, Harley 61 along the great divide just South of Truth or Consequences blocks the rest of Loco's prophecy. A screen memory is imposed during an ET contact to obscure the real event, offers Loco.

Freedom of information request reveals FBI 'domestic terrorism' training material on activists. These presentations point to one possible answer to that question: The FBI creates terrorism threats by directly training agents to believe they exist.

Sun Jun 3, 2012 6:13PM GMT

Will Potter, Common Dreams

Newly released FBI presentations show the flawed and misleading information the government is using to train agents to identify and investigate "domestic terrorist" groups such as "black separatists" anarchists, animal rights activists, and environmentalists.

Among the more troubling portions of the training materials are warnings of activists using the Freedom of Information Act, engaging in non-violent civil disobedience, and gathering in coffee shops.

The domestic terrorism training materials were obtained through the Freedom of Information Act by the ACLU. They offer additional insight into a disturbing pattern of FBI activity misrepresenting political activists as "terrorists" and manufacturing "domestic terrorism threats" where none exist, akin to the notorious COINTELPRO program of J. Edgar Hoover.

Anarchists Are "Criminals Seeking an Ideology"

In presentations on "Anarchist Extremism", the FBI warns:

- Anarchists are "Criminals seeking an ideology to justify their activities"
- Anarchists are "Not dedicated to a particular cause"
- Green anarchists believe "individuals should 'get back to nature'"

Their meeting locations include "college campuses, underground clubs, coffee houses/ internet cafes". Their criminal activity includes "Sleeping Dragons" - a form of civil disobedience in which people lock arms in PVC pipes.

Anarchists are also "paranoid/security conscious", according to the presentation. This is an interesting observation coming from the FBI, considering there have been two recent cases where the FBI played a key role in infiltrating anarchist groups in order to orchestrate alleged terrorist attacks. In the Cleveland May Day arrests, and in the Chicago NATO arrests, the FBI trumpeted the arrest of "terrorists" that agents themselves tried desperately to create.

However, not all anarchists are engaged in these types of plots, the FBI acknowledges. They use a "variety of tactics" including "civil disobedience" (such as resisting home foreclosures, creating community gardens and many other activities not mentioned by the bureau).

The FBI also warns that anarchists may have "crossover ideologies" including animal rights extremism and environmental extremism.

Animal rights/environmental extremism

In the training presentation on these so-called "eco-terrorists", the FBI lists lawful, First Amendment activity and low-level criminal activity (such as civil disobedience) as examples of domestic terrorism.

The FBI is particularly focused in these presentations on information gathering and what it calls a "public relations war" by activist groups. "Media is sometimes slanted in favor of activists", the FBI says. "Activists spin the truth".

Examples of information gathering listed by the FBI include requests for public documents under the Freedom of Information Act. In one presentation, FOIA requests are listed as examples of "University targeting".

Elsewhere the FBI warns of "cold calls" and using "USDA Report [sic]".

The FBI also warns of activist attempts to use "false employment". This is undoubtedly related to activists who seek employment at factory farms and vivisection labs in order to expose animal welfare abuses. As I have reported here previously, the FBI has considered terrorism charges for non-violent undercover investigators. And multiple states have been seeking to criminalize undercover investigations as well. As I document in Green Is the New Red, there has been a slow and relentless expansion of "terrorism" rhetoric and investigations over the last 30 years. This type of language and FBI investigation was initially confined to property crimes by the Animal Liberation Front and Earth Liberation Front - groups that have caused millions of dollars in economic loss, but have never harmed a human being.

Now this already-broad terrorism classification has been expanded even further. The Animal Enterprise Terrorism Act was drafted to target anyone who causes the "loss of profits" of an animal enterprise. The FBI acknowledges this shift in "terrorism" investigations in a slide that says the new law "alleviates the use of force or violence criteria".

Relentless Expansion of "Domestic Terrorism"

The ACLU's Mike German has an excellent dissection of the FBI's "black separatist" documents. German writes:

Who are "Black Separatists" and is there any evidence they pose a terrorist threat?

Internet searches of "Black Separatist terrorism", "Black Separatist bombing", and "Black Separatist shooting" fail to bring up any recent incidents that could be fairly described as terrorist violence. No "Black Separatist" terrorist incidents are included in the FBI's list of "Major Terrorism Cases: Past and Present", nor on the more comprehensive list of terrorist attacks going back to 1980, which are detailed in an FBI report entitled "Terrorism 2002-2005". While Black nationalist groups like the Black Panthers and the Black Liberation Army were certainly involved in political violence back in the 1970s, they no longer exist, and the last acts of violence attributed to either group were more than two decades ago.

So why are Atlanta FBI agents now searching for black separatist threats? Because the FBI appears to be training them to believe there is one using factually flawed materials.

The FBI is targeting "black separatists", anarchists, animal rights activists, and environmentalists in nearly identical methodologies. And these new documents show just how little these tactics change over time and between movements.

The FBI is manufacturing these "terrorism threats" through what I would call a process of conflation. Disparate groups are being conflated, across ideological and tactical divides, and presented as a united "threat". For instance, the FBI notes that "black separatists" are a movement that "consists of multiple groups" lacking a unified ideology, but they are lumped together because they "all share racial grievances against the U.S., most seek restitution, or governance base [sic] on religious identity or social principals [sic]".

Just as the FBI invented a new class of domestic terrorists in 2009 called "American Islamic Extremists", the FBI long ago embraced a new class of domestic terrorists called "eco-terrorists". A wide range of groups, from the Humane Society to the Animal Liberation Front, have been conflated into this catch-all term. This use of language is essential to the demonization of entire social movements because it aides in reshaping them as an "other". They are not individuals with specific political grievances, they become a mass of unreasonable extremist threats.

At the same time, the FBI is conflating a wide range of tactics. People who support anarchists or "black separatists" in their words are conflated with the very small group of people who have engaged in illegal activity. That's how the FBI is including FOIA requests and civil disobedience as example tactics in a domestic terrorism presentation. Juxtapose this with the tactics of militia extremists and white supremacists, who have murdered, lynched, bombed, assaulted government officials and created weapons of mass destruction.

To most reasonable people, such a stark disparity between these groups would raise questions about how the FBI is allocating its domestic terrorism resources. How did such misguided policies come about?

These presentations point to one possible answer to that question: The FBI creates terrorism threats by directly training agents to believe they exist.

The Irish Hitler: the strange tale of Bridget Hitler and the Nazi leader
Irish sister-in-law of Hitler and her son Patrick escaped to the US

By IrishCentral Contributing Writer, Published Sunday, June 3, 2012, 7:19 AM

The quiet grave in a small Catholic cemetery in Coram, Long Island contains the bodies of Bridget and Patrick Stuart Huston, her son.

However, there is no surname on the gravestone. That is because they were notorious under another name for decades.

Bridget Dowling was a Dublin native who married Alois, Adolf Hitler's half brother. She bore a son, Patrick who had four children himself, two of whom survive. The sons grew up on Patchogue, Long Island.

The sons are among the only remaining blood links to Adolf Hitler and the two surviving brothers have no children so if they remain that way the Hitler Irish and American link will die out.

Bridget Dowling Hitler is one of the most intriguing tales of the Second World War and the Irish connection.,

She was just 17 in the summer of 1909 at the Dublin Horse show when her father fell into conversation with a handsome foreigner Alois Hitler, who told them he was a businessman on a trip to Ireland.

He wasn't, he was actually a penniless waiter in a Dublin hotel but Bridget fell in love with the exotic foreigner anyway.

They eloped to London and were wed. He was the future Fuehrer's eldest half brother. Their common father Alois Senior went through three marriages and eight children, including Adolf and Alois.

Alois Hitler Snr had retired from ill health at the age of 58 He farmed nine acres and beat his children. Alois was the main target of his brutality. In 1898, at the age of 14, Alois left home never to return and pitched up in Dublin working in the Shelbourne Hotel.

Bridget Dowling knew little of this background when she married Alois but she would soon learn.

Alois and Bridget moved to Liverpool where they opened a restaurant but Alois was not a good businessman and soon went broke.

Bridget subsequently claimed that Adolf visited them in Liverpool to avoid conscription into the Austrian army but that story is deeply doubted.

Alois and Bridget had a son Patrick Hitler but soon Alois fled his debts and his wife and went back to Germany in 1914 where he joined the German Army, was erroneously reported killed and eventually remarried.

He began making contact with Bridget again urging her to send his son Patrick to Germany to visit. The 18-year-old went and was introduced to his now famous Uncle Adolf when he attended a Nuremberg rally.

Hitler got his nephew a job in a car factory and Patrick stayed on but soon apparently realized his Uncle Adolph was a very dangerous character after a niece he was alleged to have had an affair with was found dead. That death soured him on Hitler for life.

He rejoined his mother and as the war grew near and their link to the notorious Adolf became known they decided to emigrate to the US where they settled in Patchogue, Long Island. They now were known as Bridget and Patrick Stuart Huston

Patrick lectured audiences that his uncle was a "madman surrounded by the worst types of men. Sexual perversion is rife amongst the ranks of his closest friends" and accused Hitler of having killed his cousin Geli.

In 1941, when America joined the war effort Patrick enlisted to fight against his uncle and served in the Medical Corps where he saw action and received an honorable discharge.

After the war Patrick set up in business as a laboratory technician. He and wife Phyllis shared a big house on the property, while Bridget had a small cottage in the grounds.

Patrick and Phyllis had four sons, Alex, Louis and Brian, and one who died soon after birth. Neighbors say the family kept to themselves and did not welcome visitors. Bridget Dowling Hitler died in 1969 at the age of 78 and is buried in a small Catholic graveyard in Coram. Her gravestone reads 'Rest in Peace, Bridget Elizabeth, 7 - 3 - 91'. Her son Patrick William is buried beside her, after dying suddenly in 1987.

Thus ended the story of the Irish Hitlers a strange footnote to the rise of the Nazis and an insight into the family of the madman who led them.

Holocaust survivor ordered to return priceless gold artifact he swapped some cigarettes for to German museum

By DAILY MAIL REPORTER PUBLISHED: 15:27 GMT, 2 June 2012

There's been speculation that sometime in the 1940s, Holocaust survivor Riven Flamenbaum may have swapped a pack of smokes for a gold tablet no bigger than a Post-it note, which he kept until his death. But however Flamenbaum got the priceless treasure, a New York court has ruled it belongs to a German museum and must be given back. The Flamenbaum family intends to appeal the decision by the state appellate court in Brooklyn, a lawyer for the family said Friday.

Priceless: Riven Flamenbaum's family have been ordered to return the gold tablet to a museum in Germany

'We're extremely disappointed,' said attorney Seth Presser. 'We believe it a terribly inequitable decision.' The appeals court ruling issued earlier this week reversed a 2010 decision by a Nassau County Surrogate Court judge who found that the Vorderasiatisches Museum in Berlin had taken too long to claim an ancient artifact so rare that lawyers say it defies valuation.

The reversal was 'based on a simple proposition: Stolen stuff goes back,' Raymond Dowd, the museum's attorney, said Friday. 'This is a victory for all museums around the world.'

Reversed: The appeals court ruling issued earlier this week reversed a 2010 decision by a Nassau County Surrogate Court judge who found that the Vorderasiatisches Museum in Berlin had taken too long to claim the artefact.

According to museum records and other documents, a team of German archaeologists discovered the tablet in 1913 in an area of Iraq that was part of Ottoman Empire. They say the piece — described as 'the equivalent of a modern-day construction document' — dates to the 13th Century.

The tablet was on display from 1934 until the start of World War II, when it was placed in storage. At the end of the war, it was discovered missing.

The museum director has testified that Russian troops looted the museum. And family folklore suggests that once Flamenbaum was liberated from Auschwitz, he ran into a Russian general who made the artifact-for-cigarettes trade, Presser said.

'But the point is, we don't know,' the lawyer said. 'The only man who knows what happened here is dead.'

What's certain is that Flamenbaum arrived in the United States in 1949 with the tablet among his few possessions. When he died on Long Island in 2003 at age 92, he left it to his three children.

With Flamenbaum's estate still in flux in 2006, the museum sued for return of the artifact, claiming theft. But the surrogate court rejected the claim, citing the museum's 'inexplicable failure' for decades to report the tablet as stolen or missing, even after it learned in 1954 that it was briefly in the hands of a New York dealer.

The appeals court disagreed, saying the museum 'established that it had legal title and superior right of the possession to the tablet.'

The tablet will remain in a safe-deposit box until the legal battle is resolved.

Netanyahu orders swift deportation of 25,000 illegal African migrants Orders acceleration of holding facility construction for citizens of Eritrea and Sudan who cannot be deported due to conditions in their home countries

By Barak Ravid | Jun.04, 2012 | 1:21 AM

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu ordered his ministers to accelerate efforts to deport citizens of South Sudan, the Ivory Coast, Ghana and Ethiopia who are living in Israel illegally on Sunday.

Speaking at Sunday's cabinet meeting, Netanyahu said that while it is not possible to expel citizens of Eritrea and Sudan, whose lives would be at risk in their home countries, holding facilities for them must be built in the Negev as quickly as possible.

A senior Israeli official said that two different groups of infiltrators were presented during Sunday's cabinet debate. The first was infiltrators from countries with which Israel has diplomatic relations, and with regard to whom there is no barrier to repatriating them under international law, he said. This group numbers some 25,000 of the approximately 60,000 African migrants now in Israel.

The second group comprises infiltrators from Eritrea, Sudan and Somalia, who cannot be repatriated because their lives would be at risk, according to the official. This group comprises some 35,000 people.

Sudan is classified as an enemy country, another reason that infiltrators can't be returned there, he said, while Eritrea, though it has diplomatic relations with Israel, considers those who fled the country to be AWOL soldiers, and upon their return home they could be severely punished. Eritrea has a mandatory conscription law for all men aged 17-45, and demands reserve duty up to age 55. There are no exemptions.

With regard to the first group of infiltrators, Netanyahu said, "Whoever can be sent away should be sent away from here as quickly as possible."

With regard to the second group, he said, "It's clear that we cannot return Sudanis and Eritreans to their countries."

During the cabinet debate, Netanyahu appeared impatient and dissatisfied with the conduct of the relevant ministries and banged on the table several times, according to sources who were present. He ordered a substantial expansion of the Saharonim lockup in the Negev so that it could hold the tens of thousands of people who can't be repatriated.

He also ordered a team of interrogators put together to interview all those who will be brought to the Saharonim facility to determine whether they are indeed entitled to refugee status.

The Foreign Ministry has been conducting intensive discussions for several months with the governments of those countries whose citizens can be repatriated, a senior ministry source said.

For example, Israel is exerting heavy pressure on Ethiopia to begin returning its citizens who are in Israel illegally. Ethiopian diplomats have visited the Saharonim facility and interviewed Ethiopian nationals. The Foreign Ministry has also been in regular contact with South Sudan, whose nationals are being given a chance to return voluntarily. On June 17 a plane carrying some 200 South Sudanese will fly from Israel to Juba, the South Sudan capital. In mid-July there will be another plane of South Sudanese who agreed to leave but asked to do so after the school year ends.

A senior Foreign Ministry source said that Israel has made it clear to countries like the Ivory Coast and Ghana that the government plans to deport their nationals, by force if necessary, and that if their governments don't issue the migrants travel documents, then Israel will do so.

"We told them, 'Either we do this together, or we will just put them on planes by ourselves,'" the senior official said.

The Foreign Ministry also said that over the past five years it has approached third countries to ascertain whether any of them would be willing to accept refugees from Eritrea or Sudan. Israeli diplomats were in touch with 30 African countries and 10 Western countries but were categorically refused.

"All the African states and many European ones are dealing with the same problem," a senior source said. "Everyone to whom we addressed a request slammed the door in our faces."

Khamenei – West talks of nuclear Iran to hide own problems

Marcus George, Reuters, 04/06 04:47 CET

DUBAI – Iran's supreme leader accused the West on Sunday of lying about his country's nuclear plans in order to cover up their own problems, in a fiery speech that gave no indication he was ready to compromise in talks with world powers.

In an address marking the 23rd anniversary of the death of his predecessor Ruhollah Khomeini, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei warned Israel that any attack on Iran would be answered with a "thunderous blow".

Khamenei – who has total command over Iran's nuclear policy – has publicly forbidden the development of nuclear weapons, but western nations suspect that Tehran is developing in isolation each of the components required for an atomic bomb capability.

"What Americans and westerners do is idiotic. They magnify the nuclear issue to cover up their own problems," Khamenei said, referring to the economic gloom in the U.S. and Europe.

"They are deceitfully using the term nuclear weapons."

Israeli talk of military strikes showed it felt vulnerable after the fall of former Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, a U.S. and western ally, last year, Khamenei said. "If they take any miscalculated action, they will receive a thunderous blow."

On Saturday a senior military commander said Iranian missiles could reach all parts of Israel and threatened U.S. bases in the region if Iran was attacked.

While Iranian officials maintain a defiant tone, Iran has returned to talks with world powers after the West severely tightened sanctions, targeting its oil exports and isolating its banks, to pressure Tehran to curb what it believes is a bid for nuclear arms capability.

U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton played down Khamenei's comments, saying she did not think they had any bearing on the next round of talk between Iran and the United States, Russia, China, Britain, France and Germany, scheduled for June 18-19 in Moscow.

"I don't draw any conclusions from that statement with respect to the potential success of the talks in Moscow," Clinton told reporters in Stockholm.

"We look forward to seeing what the Iranians actually bring to the table in Moscow. We want to see a diplomatic resolution," she said. "We now have an opportunity to achieve it and we hope it is an opportunity that is not lost, for everyone's sake."

Diplomats say that at the last talks, in Baghdad on May 23-24, Iranian negotiators were more forthcoming than before, and believe Khamenei has given his negotiating team a wider hand to explore a deal.

During his address, Khamenei said that sanctions were not hampering Iran and were "deepening Iran's hatred towards the West".

Iran maintains it will not give up what it says is its right to establish a peaceful nuclear programme but has at times appeared flexible to curbing high-grade uranium enrichment that is the West's most pressing concern.

Israel, US using cyberspace to attack enemies

June 4, 2012, - 5:48AM

Israel has admitted that it uses cyberspace to attack its enemies. The confession came in a statement on the Israeli military's website on Sunday, local time.

The website said it was "for the first time" revealing a document recently written by the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) Operations Department, detailing the goals and methods of its cyber warfare.

"The IDF has been engaged in cyber activity consistently and relentlessly," said the statement. It said it had been using cyberspace for intelligence gathering and "will" also use it "to execute attacks" and "clandestine" operations.

The admission comes after revelations the US Government was responsible for Stuxnet, the virus that in 2010 is said to have crippled Iran's uranium enrichment facilities. A report in The New York Times by David E. Sanger, based on the book Confront and Conceal: Obama's Secret Wars and Surprising Use of American Power, published, said President Barack Obama ordered the computer virus program, begun during the Bush administration, be ramped up. Iran had previously said Israel and the US were behind the attack.

Cyber activity would also be used to maintain Israel's military edge over its enemies, and to curtail their military capabilities.

Another goal was "thwarting and disrupting enemy projects" targeting the Israeli military and government. The statement comes less than a week after one of the world's top virus-hunting agencies said it discovered a virus codenamed Flame on computers in Iran and several Middle East countries.

The virus was designed to carry out cyber espionage by stealing images, audio conversations and other data, and had been in use for more than two years without being noticed.

Flame targets computers running the Windows operating system and apparently spreads through infected thumb drives, websites and manipulated emails.

The Moscow-based Kaspersky Lab said most infections (189) were found in Iran, and, although other infections (98) were also found in Israel and the Palestinian territories, its sophistication has triggered media speculation that it was created by Israel.

Kaspersky Lab compared Flame to Duqu and Stuxnet, two other virus programs that targeted Iran.

There has also been speculation Israel was behind Stuxnet, a worm that infiltrated industrial systems of the German company Siemens, apparently to disrupt uranium enrichment in Iran.

Report: German officials confirm submarines sold to Israel can fire nuclear-tipped cruise missiles

Remarks cited by German weekly Der Spiegel regarding Dolphin-class submarines contradict past remarks by Chancellor Angela Merkel, who said that the vessels do not have nuclear weapons capabilities.

By Ofer Aderet | Jun.03, 2012 | 10:33 AM, DPA

Submarines produced by Germany and supplied to Israel as part of an extensive arms deal are equipped to enable the launch of nuclear-tipped cruise missiles, the German weekly Der Spiegel reported on Sunday.

Get all the latest updates on Haaretz's Tumblr blog and Facebook page

Last month, Israel received its fourth Dolphin -class submarine from Germany, which is expected to become operational in 2013.

According to a senior Israel Navy officer speaking upon the arrival of the craft, the "submarine has a range for everything," adding that it needs to refuel and charge its batteries only once in a long while.

"This submarine can stay underwater for longer," he added, saying it had both "visible and invisible" abilities and was meant to operate in the Mediterranean.

The first three submarines were given to Israel by Germany in the late 1990s, with the German government footing most of the bill.

According to foreign reports, they are equipped with cruise missiles that have a range of 1,500 kilometers and can carry nuclear warheads. These reports say the submarines enable Israel to deliver a "second strike" in the event of a nuclear attack.

In its report on Sunday, a report in German weekly Der Spiegel, citing a months-long probe, confirmed that the submarines supplied by Germany were indeed fitted to enable nuclear-warhead carrying cruise missiles.

Under the headline "Secret Operation: Samson," the German weekly indicated that "after years of speculations as to the technical armament of the submarines Germany exports to Israel," experts in "Germany and in Jerusalem now confirm: They are armed with nuclear warheads."

"Berlin has known this for quite some time," the article added.

In his column opening Sunday's Der Spiegel, Editor in Chief Georg Mascolo wrote that "months-long research proves that the submarines Germany supplies the Israeli navy make use of equipment to carry nuclear weapons."

"Now, German officials admit, since they know what the use Israel is making of German weapons," Mascolo added.

If the information acquired by Der Spiegel is indeed correct, it could cause quite a bit of embarrassment to German Chancellor Angela Merkel and her government, which have been consistent in their claim that the submarines provided to Israel are not nuclear.

The German left-wing has dispensed harsh criticism over the supply of the naval crafts to Israel, claims that Merkel has thus far been able to reject.

Most recently, the issue was stirred anew by famed German author Gunter Grass, who penned a poem severely critical of Israel's policies and of Germany's sale of submarines to the IDF.

In his poem "What must be Said," Grass said that "Israel's nuclear potential has been stealthily growing for years," without being under any kind of international supervision. Grass believes that Israel is planning to arm submarines recently purchased from Germany with nuclear warheads.

"Germany could be responsible for a crime that can be foreseen," Grass wrote.

Nazi propaganda website starts operation in Iran, government censors do nothing – 12:18 AM 06/02/2012

A pro-Nazi association now operates a Persian-language website in Iran, promoting anti-Semitism and memorializing Adolf Hitler, apparently with the approval of the Iranian government and its censors.

The site, Nazicenter.ir features videos of Nazi leaders and pictures of Hitler, and praises the Third Reich for nearly conquering the Western world. It also includes a public forum whose members routinely discuss their hatred of the Jewish people.

The site's primary goal, its administrators write, is to confront the "story of the Holocaust, which without a doubt has been taken advantage of in contemporary history."

Iran's Islamic regime strictly regulates all forms of communication. Hundreds of websites have been banned, and Iranians' online access to the free world is severely restricted. But a Nazi propaganda website is consistent with the proclamations of Iran's military and political leaders, who have both denied the existence of the Nazi Holocaust and called for the destruction of Israel.

The chief commander of the Iranian armed forces, Maj. Gen. Hassan Firouzabadi, announced the doctrine of the Islamic regime in a recent speech. "The Iranian nation is standing for its cause," he said, "and that is the full annihilation of Israel." Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei has openly called Israel a "cancerous tumor" that should be cut out. And Iran's president, Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, has repeatedly denied the Holocaust occurred.

Nazicenter.ir is hosted on a Web server in Germany and administered by two individuals who also own the Internet domain "NaziClub.ir."

The website, according to Google's "FeedBurner" syndication service, has more than 1,200 subscribers. Its online forums serve nearly 1,700 members, including some with online avatars named "Klaus.barbie," "NEW Heil" and "Heinrich_Himmler."

A published set of ground rules prominently displayed for forum participants includes the warning that "All members must respect the current laws of the Islamic Republic of Iran." The also include requirements that members should promote "the expansion of Iran's nationalism" and "make known the true picture of Zionism."

"We as an Internet media outlet consider it a duty to show the ugly and oppressive face of Zionism," the text continues, "which rules the world's media who have hidden its true face."

While Nazicenter.ir includes historical reports about Hitler's messages to troops and the Nazi military's operations during World War II, it also features an article about "the issue of race and ability, and IQ differences between different races."

On April 20 the site offered "congratulations" to its readers "with Aryan blood" on the anniversary of Adolf Hitler's birth. On May 9 an unnamed author republished video of a 1938 speech in which Hitler warned about the dangers Allied powers posed to "occupied Palestine."

"If you think that the German leader was thinking of rescuing Germany alone from such exploitation, then you are wrong," the writer insists. "Adolf Hitler in his 12 years of governance criticized the Western powers in defense of the oppressed — one of them being the Palestinians."

The article praised Hitler for transforming a war-torn country with enormous debts into a superpower in terms of technology, industry, military and luxury for its people. Hitler is seen as a symbol of iron determination who rose to great leadership from homelessness.

The Iranian theocracy's silent approval of the website is apparent in several places, including the "about us" page. "This website operates completely within the laws and regulations of the Islamic Republic of Iran," the text reads in part.

A similar site was disbanded in early 2011 after briefly appearing online in 2010 and announcing: "This website is under Islamic Republic of Iran laws and it is under the supervision of the working committee on Digital Media of the Ministry of Culture and Islamic Guidance."

Hitler devised his "Final Solution" for exterminating Jews and other "inferior" people, a Holocaust that killed an estimated 6 million Jews, more than the 5.5 million represented in the more recent Israeli census. That count also identifies 1.5 million Arabs.

Iranian leaders believe their own "Final Solution" — the destruction of Israel — will bring on the last imam, an Islamic messiah who will rule the world.

Reza Kahlili is a pseudonym for a former CIA operative in Iran's Revolutionary Guards and the author of the award-winning book "A Time to Betray." ## House Passes HR 4133 Binding the US to Israel and Their War Agenda

Susanne Posel, Occupy Corporatism, May 25, 2012

Without any mainstream media coverage at all, the House of Representatives passed the United States – Israel Enhanced Security Cooperation Act of 2012 \(USIESC\).

The USIESC, written by Eric Cantor, claims there is a need to provide Israel with unlimited military and financial aid as a result of the disturbances caused by the Arab Spring.

Israel will have an essentially unlimited amount of funds allocated to them through the Federal Reserve Bank. The country will also enjoy an “expanded role of NATO” that consists of an “enhanced presence at NATO headquarters and exercises”.

The USIESC pledges the US government’s “commitment” to assist Israel in remaining a Jewish State; as well as protection from the UN if the UN Security Council resolves to hold Israel accountable to international laws.

The US government’s counter-terrorism unit will also aid Israel by any means.

This USIESC asserts that “supported by the American people” the US government will “repeatedly affirm the special bond between the United States and Israel” and that the two countries have “shared values and shared interests.”

If there were ever language to suppose that there were a merging of these two nations, the USIESC fits that bill.

The Executive Summary of USIESC says that “the following actions to assist in the defense of Israel” are:

(1) Provide Israel such support as may be necessary to increase development and production of joint missile defense systems, particularly such systems that defend the urgent threat posed to Israel and United States forces in the region.

(2) Provide Israel assistance specifically for the production and procurement of the Iron Dome defense system for purposes of intercepting short-range missiles, rockets, and projectiles launched against Israel.

(3) Provide Israel defense articles and defense services through such mechanisms as appropriate, to include air refueling tankers, missile defense capabilities, and specialized munitions.

(4) Allocate additional weaponry and munitions for the forward-deployed United States stockpile in Israel.

(5) Provide Israel additional surplus defense articles and defense services, as appropriate, in the wake of the withdrawal of United States forces from Iraq.

(6) Strengthen efforts to prevent weapons smuggling into Gaza pursuant to the 2005 Agreement on Movement and Access following the Israeli withdrawal from Gaza and to protect against weapons smuggling and terrorist threats from the Sinai Peninsula.

(7) Offer the Israeli Air Force additional training and exercise opportunities in the United States to compensate for Israel’s limited air space.

(8) Expand Israel’s authority to make purchases under the Foreign Military Financing program on a commercial basis.

(9) Seek to enhance the capabilities of the United States and Israel to address emerging common threats, increase security cooperation, and expand joint military exercises.

(10) Encourage an expanded role for Israel within the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), including an enhanced presence at NATO headquarters and exercises.

(11) Support extension of the long-standing loan guarantee program for Israel, recognizing Israel’s unbroken record of repaying its loans on time and in full.

(12) Expand already-close intelligence cooperation, including satellite intelligence, with Israel.

USIESC goes on to claim that: “Iran, (3) which has long sought to foment instability and promote extremism in the Middle East, is now seeking to (4) exploit the dramatic political transition underway in the region to undermine governments traditionally aligned with the United States and support extremist political movements in these countries.”

On the contrary, Israel and the US have been the biggest proponents of violence toward unprovoked nations in recent times. The collaboration of the US, Israel and NATO, with help from CIA operatives al-Qaeda and other US funded terrorist groups, have synthesized fake revolutions (i.e. the Arab Spring) to destabilize foreign governments and force regime changes.

Right now, al-Qaeda is being used by the Obama administration to force the Syrian President out of office through repeated attacks and massive killing of innocent Syrians.

In Africa, specifically the south Sudan region, Obama has teamed up with Israel to create the new nation of South Sudan by using terrorism to force their current government out.

USIESC continues its assault on Iran: “At the same time, (5) Iran may soon attain a nuclear weapons capability, a development that would fundamentally threaten vital American interests, destabilize the region, encourage regional nuclear proliferation, further empower and embolden Iran, (6) the world’s leading state sponsor of terrorism, and (7) provide it the tools to threaten its neighbors, including Israel”.

Although publicly, both the Obama administration and the Israeli government have admitted that Iran has absolutely no intention of building nuclear weapons. Both governments assume that by using words like “they may” or “they might” denotes a definite intention to do so.

The Mullahs that have ultimate authority in Iran have stated numerous times that the acquisition and use of nuclear weapons goes against the law of Islam. Independent studies, outside of the US and Israeli reach, have also confirmed that not only does Iran not have nuclear weapons at present, but are not perusing their allocation.

To justify the fabricated “need” to assist Israel in remaining “safe” the USIESC states : “As a result, (8) the strategic environment that has kept Israel secure and safeguarded United States national interests for the past 35 years has eroded.”

At the present time, Israel is in possession of an estimated 200 – 300 nuclear weapons. They are the covert superpower of the world. Israel also enjoys one of the most intensive and explicit armies in the world. While Israel continues to invade the sovereign nations that surround them, they are not being invaded themselves.

The USIESC is a propaganda piece of legislation designed to set the stage for full military support of Israel when they launch an unprovoked strike against Iran. While now, there are campaigns to coerce a fake grassroots effort to force a regime change in Iran, the inevitability of war declarations are looming in the distance.

China and Russia have made it clear that they have absolutely no intention of ending their relations with Iran.

The distractions in the mainstream media concerning Obama are just that. The sudden inflation of gay rights in the political arena and other nonsensical and unimportant social memes are being touted as if they will define our nation.

The USIESC has clearly set a precedent and definition of who America is. The Obama administration, under careful control of the global Elite, is consolidating powers with Israel in a joint effort to take over the world . . . by toppling one government at a time.
